

“There’s an App for That”

Users of Apple mobile devices like the iPad, iPhone and iPod Touch will tell you that, no matter what your needs are, “there’s an app for that.” Literally, there are apps for travel, games, recipes, finance, music, books, navigation, news, videos, movies, sports, magazines, photography, reference, social networking and a whole lot more. Of course, all current mobile devices (notably Android tablets and smart phones) have many of these apps, but Apple is known for having more apps than any other company, many of which are free (though these are usually ad-supported).

Since its release about two years ago, the iPad has been the go-to tablet computer. Actually, when it first became available, it was the ONLY tablet computer – the iPad 1. Since then, a newer, lighter, thinner iPad became available, adding two cameras (rear facing and front facing for video chat) and other features that have kept it high atop the tablet computer sales lists. Other companies like Samsung have come out with competitive products, but the iPad still tops the sales charts.

In our desire to help our members stay abreast of such newer technologies, the Quail Creek Computer Club is presenting a program on Monday, March 19th at 7:00 pm in the Silver Room. The program, conducted by Paul Jaffe, will feature the iPad 2. Paul, an avid user of the iPad since its introduction, will discuss the latest models available. He will talk about cost, features, and benefits and will demonstrate several of the apps he believes you will find useful or entertaining.
